At St. Peter's Cathedral.

The choir of St. Peter's Cathedral have with their usual energy made preparations for the rendition of Mozart's Iwelfth Mass on Easter Sunday, and it is confidently expected that the music will even excel in grandeur the masses of previous feast days. The choir will be assisted by Bauer's full orchestra. It is well to note that Mozart's "Glorla" from the Twelfth mass, will be sung complete, and it is a known fact among good musicians that the last movement, "The Cum Sancto Spiritu." is generally omitted by even the largest choirs in the big city of New York. So it will be a real musical treat which will be appreciated by many. PROGRAMME.

Is this quest of a higher and nobler being to be confined to the masculine side of our life together; or am I to be expected to contribute my share toward painting the lily and gilding refined gold? Or, to put it in everyday English, do you mean to aspire, with my help, as critic to the queen, to the realization of some poet's dream?"

George, I am not joking." "Neither am I, I assure you. You propose to aid me to become something nearer to the ideal man. Very good. Now am I to do my feeble best in alding you to reach some higher sphere?" "I hope so," she replied, with a slightly puzzled look.

"All right. Then if I am to give un smoking-and I certainly shall not waste time in attempting to deny that I should be the better for it-I suppose it becomes my duty to suggest any little changes in your own habits that would aid you in reaching the noblest ideal of womanhood?" Why, yes, George. Yes, of course.

"Oh, trifles, trifles! But we are talking of ideals. The average man may smoke if he likes, but for a Lance-"George, don't. I hate to be made fun of when I am talking in earnest." "Well, never mind Lancelot, If t am to give up smoking. I am not sure I shall be doing my duty by you if I

"George, I do wish you would talk of something sensible. Let us go back to some of the arrangements about the wedding. Shall we ask the Burnets?"

"No! Why, he smokes." "I think you're simply silly."

"But how about this great reform of "George, you'll never let me be foolish, will you, love?" "No, pet. And I'll be careful about net smoking too much."

"Then we will ask the Burnets?" "Of course. They're harmless." er notion of devotion

Is of the rag time kind.
